km 587 Fort Fraser, with a population of about 1000 people, is located on the Nechako River at the eastern end of Fraser Lake about 1 1/2 hours west of Prince George, BC. Historic points of interest are the Nadleh Whut'em Indian Village, Beaumont Park and the site where the "last spike" was driven on the Grand Trunk Railway on April 7, 1914. Tourist Info Center is at the east end of town.

The Nadleh Whut'em First Nations Carrier people still occupy their original living site. They are a patriarchal society which means the children receive their last names from their fathers. Their four clans are the bear, frog, beaver, and the caribou.

One of the buildings of the original Fort Fraser sits at Beaumont Provincial Park. This fort was built during the fur trade in 1806 by the Northwest Company and named after Simon Fraser.

On April 7, 1914, the "Last Spike" of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad was driven near Fort Fraser. This was Canada's second Trans Continental Railway and linked the Prairies with the West Coast and Prince Rupert. Completion of the railway opened the area up to further settlement.
